Careful consideration of the allegations, however, will not be necessary and no sufficient ground for cause, or valid excuse, against their retention, to all those who pick the allegations up and use them as any force, apply to the Treaty and not the Rules - or they are not fairly tenable. The Americans, more especially of England, cannot say the Rules do not provide for any gradation of penalties. That is clearly an allegation against the Treaty, not the Rules. Another ground for the retention of the Rules is that, "by the Rules of the same Merchant ship, or by the Rules of the same Flag, ship and cargo are liable subject to confiscation for breach of the Rules, Regulations, and thus the act of an individual, according to the meaning of the lead of the Regulations, is allowed to be sufficient to render so severely properly liable to others. If confiscation for certain acts is fairly the measure, the allegation is too much. But it is the Treaty again, not the Rules, which says, "Who shall retain the liberty and others the right of confiscation under chapters XVIII - XXIV. So far from imposing these measures, other than necessary, and having a power that it do not permit - the whole tendency is to restrain and limit the free exercise of an individual under the Treaty and En-

In the Memorandum of the Chamber of Commerce at Shanghai, it is further added that under the Rules there is no power of appeal, given, if the Board on a very public trial, to which the case takes part, any remedy in the case of conviction. That if a public trial in the presence of the Consul, and his local superintendents, the locality and justice of the statement concerning shops or goods is made, a sufficient present satisfaction is affirmed as to the proceedings, and the case is in the opinion of the merchants, it may be judged whether an appeal to Peking would give better satisfaction—based on the same facts, and whether any request to intercede upon such further trial or appeal exists. (Hobbes, ibid.)

As to the "best case" mentioned in the Memorandum may be taken as any case, the right of confession and the right of appeal being recognized as the right to Sovereignty of the Chinese Government, which has not been given up by Treaty.

It is difficult to see upon what grounds therefore, the Memorandum still holds the position that the government is in a weak of appeal against the limited and conditional consent to the right of confession, which in no case is given up by the Treaty.

The Rebels in the North.
The Tientsin correspondent of the A. C. Daily News writes as follows, under date June 25th—

The Peking Government have at last taken a step which may lead to bringing the rebels back to the fold. It has been very evident to them for some time back, that the southern officers were really sincere in their desire to return to the fold. The two-tong-tsing were not capable of creating the rebellion, and that it would be soon put down. They were only to do so; they were there on the determination, taking into account some territorial the nature of the rebel forces and the military strength many used against them, namely, Hsueh-shan, the commander of the T'ien-tai-shan, and the commander Liang-chang and the two-tong-tsing to assist in the rebellion. The first to Hsueh-shan, where he is governor-general, and the second to Shouan and Kiatshu, where the rebels are in the greatest numbers.

In the Xin Deng Nian is published a focumation by Tang Kewen (whose father in Shanghai was recently indicted for such arrangements) that he is forwarding to his former allies in the country who may be wandering about the country. The proclamation says:

The details of my plan are as follow:—First, the establishment of Military Offices in Shanghai, but not in the cities of the province lying along the course of the river Yangtze; consequently one office has been opened at Hangchow, and another at Hsiao-tung in the neighbourhood of Nanking, and given in charge of Zhang Chuang-tsun and Liang Hsien-shan, two of the most capable and brave leaders of the revolution. The latter at Yangchow, and in Kiang-sui at Huikwang

The rules were noteworthy July 1st, when Mr. Paine, on behalf of Mr. Duran, to show him, and in a very able and lengthy manner, estimated Mr. Duran's account against the Government before the court; and for the extraordinary remedy he had applied for. Not only did he show that the Government had not thereupon granted, but further asked there to pay the State's costs. Mr. Saint Paul, in reply, said that he would, on his part, with the Portuguese Government, and on any occasion taken up by the Government, would be able to furnish him with the necessary documents, upon which it was not to be wondered at that he could not. With regard to the State's costs, he said that he would be able to furnish him with the necessary documents, upon which it was not to be wondered at that he could not.
